Russians Take Offensive at Two Points

Possible Deadlock Hinted as Germans Make No Land Advance Claims

By the Associated Press Twin Russian counter offensives were reported Wednesday to have rolled back the German thrust toward Moscow and Leningrad.

In this claimed resurgence of Red army power the Russians said they had retaken 22 villages in a 10-day 30-mile counter thrust on the center of the main front before Moscow, destroyed an entire division of elite blackshirts of Hitler's infantry and driven the Germans back three miles from Leningrad.

Nazis Thrown Back Leningrad had been under a great threat, it was said. The German claimed Tuesday to have driven within 20 miles of the city. While little was said of the nearness of Nazis forces to Moscow, it has been established that the Germans have passed beyond Smolensk to the Vyaznia area about 125 miles southwest of the capital.

A strategically important and otherwise unidentified city was said to have fallen to the counter attacks of the inspired Leningrad defenders.

While Leningrad forces were executing a stroke under the command of Marshal Voroshilov troops on the central front were wrestling an important heights from the Germans according to accounts by the army newspaper Red Star and Pravda, organ of the Communist party.

The central counter offensive was said to be pointed by Russia's own panzer forces which were credited with slicing through a German salient base.

Deadlock Hinted Reflecting perhaps new difficulties encountered by the Germans Hitler's communique was barren of details on operations saying "successful fighting actions were now in progress."

Heading possibly for a deadlock around which makes for a war of position and attrition in the world of tradition both Russia and Germany stepped up aerial offensives.

At the Germans roar on the western front British aerial assaults, thus far her only aid to Russia, gained hitting power.

Claiming an edge the Russians said they had shot down 138 German planes Saturday, Sunday and Monday with a loss of less than a third of that number from their own forces.

Many Melons Shipped Here

One Local Dealer Alone Sells More Than 100 Loads

C. H. Carlton, local watermelon dealer, said Thursday that he had shipped more than 100 truckloads of melons from this area to all parts of the United States.

Mr. Carlton, whose headquarters is on East Third street, expressed his appreciation to farmers who cooperated with him in furnishing melons.

"What Hope needs is a place for farmers to market their melons and produce," Mr. Carlton said. He indicated that sheds in some part of town would draw truckers and afford dealers an immediate turnover in produce.

Soldiers Send 971 Copies of Star to New York State Alone

Illinois Second Highest With Total of 445 Copies — Paper Goes to Canada, China and Brazil

The Star's Soldiers Mail-Away Edition of Saturday, August 23, and the revised edition of Saturday, August 30, sent approximately 4,000 copies into 42 states, Canada, China and Brazil—in the most far-flung advertisement ever obtained for Hope and Hempstead county in a single mailing.

Another record was smashed, for the newspaper, when the edition of August 23 had to be put back on the press for a re-run, making a total of about 8,000 copies—and far outstriking the 1936 Centennial Edition, which held the previous record of 5,000 copies printed and sold.

The 27th Division, from the metropolitan and up-state New York areas, showed its hand clearly in the Soldiers Mail-Away Edition. New York state was far out in front with a total of 971 copies addressed and mailed in The Star office.

The second biggest mailing address was Illinois, key-state of the 3rd Division, which got 445 copies. The remainder of the first 10 states showed the following scores:

Tennessee 176; Missouri 124; New Jersey 100; Kansas 61; Nebraska 56; Arkansas 51; Ohio 50; and Pennsylvania 39.

Canada got three copies, one went to Shanghai, China, and one to Rio de Janeiro, Brazil.

RAF Renews Plane Attacks

Round-the-Clock Offensive Continues Wednesday

LONDON—(AP)—Wave after wave of British bombers shuttled across the English Channel Tuesday night and Wednesday to continue the round the clock aerial offensive.

The first wave of RAF raiders droned eastward a short time after darkness and anti-aircraft fire lighted the sky over Boulogne and Calais indicating the French coast—which was hammered Tuesday—was taking another pounding.

Succeeding waves of long range bombers carried to the Reich itself. (Dispatches from Berlin said British bombers struck with explosives and incendiary bombs in one of the anti-aircraft barrages.)

The German air force was comparatively inactive the British said, acknowledging that a few Nazi planes flew over coastal areas and bombs fell at one northeast England town doing damage to one plane.

Missouri automobile traffic increased 16 per cent in the first half of 1941.

Office Moving Routine Stuff

SPG Officials Take Job of Moving in Day's Stride

The job of moving the office of the Southwestern Proving Ground from temporary quarters in the high school building to the new field structures was completed over the weekend.

Despite the fact that the job required the use of 12 trucks and drivers, as well as some 25 laborers, the work was completed without any difficulty.

Mr. Vere W. Reynolds, who was in charge of the moving, was lavish in praise of department heads who planned the moving procedure.

Mr. Reynolds said, "Except for a little rain, everything went fine. Each piece of equipment was carried straight to a predesignated location and I haven't heard of any losses."

Office routine proceeded uninterrupted this week as stenographers and accountants, as well as executives worked at the same old desks in a new office.

One department head, who modestly refused to be quoted, summed up the move as: "It really was a small matter compared to what we do every day out in the field."

Premier Says Japan Faces Gravest Crisis

Studies Ways to Halt Russian Supplies, Develop Economic Power

TOKIO (AP)—Premier Prince Konoye told government and war industry representatives Wednesday that Japan was facing the gravest crisis in history. Domei, Japanese news agency said, and that total mobilization was necessary to overcome the emergency.

It was Konoye's first statement since July 30 and came as a proposed movement of U. S. war supplies to Russia, through waters adjacent to Japan was the subject of discussion in Tokyo, Washington and Moscow.

Develop Economic Power The Premier spoke before a round table conference of government executives and leaders of Japanese business concerns in one of a series of meetings called by the National Service Association to develop Japan's economic power.

Leaders of Tohokai, extreme nationalist political group, threw their support to proposals Tuesday for the establishment of an Ocean Safety Zone which Konoye was said to have under consideration.

Plane Contact Dangerous Flight of two Soviet warplanes across the Bering sea to Alaska (bearing 47 Russian airmen on what was described in Washington as a purely technical mission) was cited by the Japanese Times and Asahi as "indicating the possibility of future danger in the north."

"Any effort to establish a system of plane service between American and Asiatic countries will be viewed by authorities charged with defense of Japan as a threat to Japan."

Declaring that encirclement had been demonstrated "to the youth and west the newspaper said "Japan cannot stand by idle while the scheme for a northern encirclement is in the making."

Defense Shortage: College Boy-Friends

By ELEANOR RAGSDALE

NEA Service Staff Correspondent
WASHINGTON — The threatened disappearance of silk stockings, brass knuckles and fancy perfumes are as nothing to Miss Co-ed beside the newest national defense crisis to loom in her life.

There'll be a shortage of college boy-friends this fall.

Feminine competition will be keen on the campus for, while male students will be fewer, school authorities here report that many more girls than usual have enrolled in American colleges.

Selective Service hasn't alone cut down the number of campus heroes—in fact, educational experts rate it only third among the causes. The main swing away from college is caused by an open labor market which lures the boys with promises of fat defense pay checks. Voluntary enlistment apparently has stolen away the next largest number of college males. Then comes Selective Service.

Defense Dollars Flow Into Girl's Education

Keeping lots of draft-age boys in college is the Occupational Deferment provision of the Selective Service Act, which has continually been broadened in scope to include laddies studying for vital occupations. Chemistry, engineering, medical sciences, geology, agriculture and veterinary skills are the main fields in which students past freshman year are exempted from immediate service induction. Teacher-training, accountancy and business administration may soon be added. So, you see, colleges aren't as hard hit by the draft as anticipated—and indeed some of the technical schools are filled to overflowing.

When it comes to figuring why there is such an upswing in the number of college girls, it boils down to a question of dollars and cents. More papas in defense jobs, more money for daughters' education.

The present college situation could be changed. Congress could lower the Selective Service minimum age-limit. The spreading of unemployment in non-defense industries could counteract the defense income boom. But right now that's how the collegiate picture stands.

As to courses, there is a trend toward math and science and history. There are the short courses in chemistry, engineering and industrial management. Some girls' schools are introducing mechanics and nursing. But again and again the educational planners urge: "Don't forget the long-range preparation which college alone can give you for leadership in other important fields." They point out that economists and sociologists aren't trained in a month, and are becoming more and more important in the changing and dislocated war-world. So they hope the technical skills won't monopolize too many of the intellectuals.

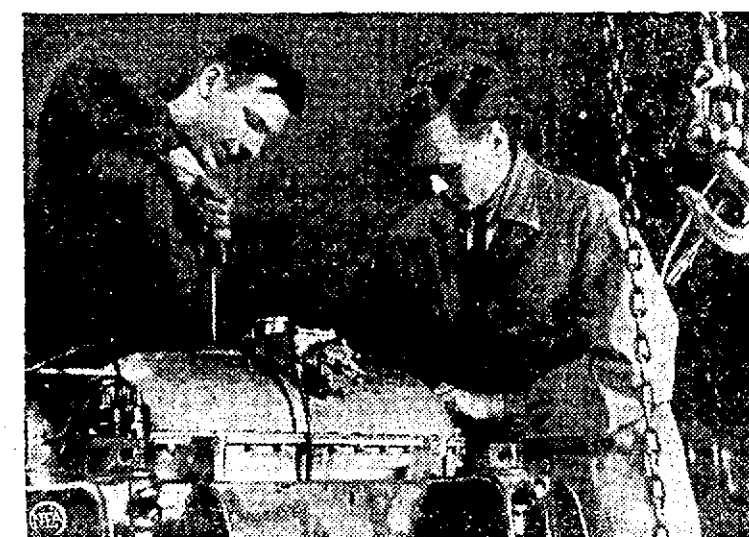

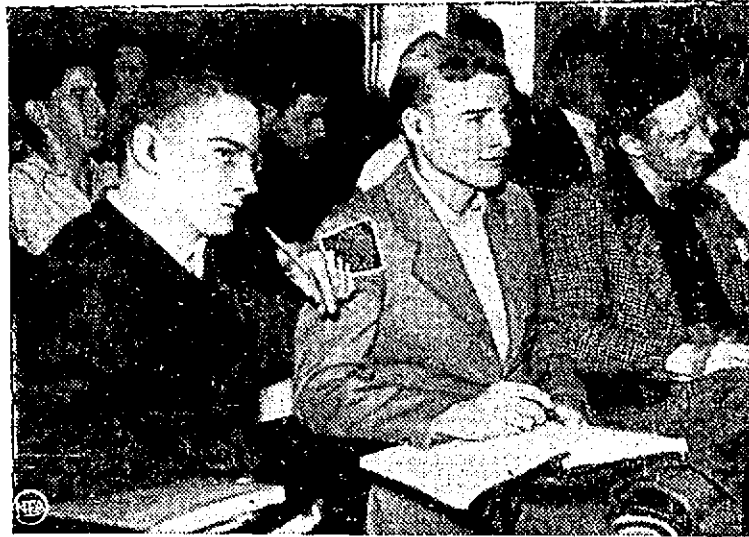

High Schools Teach Many New Subjects

There is a boom in the high-school field. More teen-age students than ever before—quarter of a million more. Part of that is due to a higher national income. But most of it comes from the big stirrings that have been made in the past year or two in vocational education. High schools aren't the dry, theoretical places they used to be. Besides the old stand-bys, secretarial courses and home economics, they have burst forth with a new flock of subjects like preliminary radio and electrical training, welding, mechanics—even basic aerodynamics.

The N. Y. A.—National Youth Administration—has played an important part in helping a million and a half high-school and college students continue their education by earning money at jobs related to school activities.

Contrasted to the teeming high-schools are the elementary schools, in which nearly 200,000 less pupils are expected to enroll this year. This decline is a significant result of the eight depression years, according to analysts. During those uncertain years the nation's birth-rate declined markedly, thus leaving fewer children now under the 12-year-old level.

All of the school-goers from kindergarten through high school will find some new emphasis in their courses. As never before the country is aroused about health and nutrition. Games and free school lunches and vitamin charts and chest-tappings will try to keep the children fit and guide

Pity the poor companionless coed, too. Due to defense, there's a boom in the number of girls going to college, but more and more men like those in middle photo, are exchanging campus for camp, or for defense industry jobs. Other boys of college and high school age, bottom, are studying new and technical subjects—such as welding, mechanics, even basic aerodynamics.

School projects for conservation of community facilities and school supplies raising of gardens, defense savings, as well as sewing and knitting for war victims, will be aimed at making the young fry defense-conscious. They'll be studying current events as soon as they can read—maybe even before by pictures. There is to be a strong drive to make citizenship alive and vital, by participation in community affairs, and practicing self-government in school matters.

Parents in many communities may well be saying, "It's all very well to talk about these fine plans, but where is my kid going to find a school?" For the flow of workers to crowded defense areas has swamped the facilities of towns in Michigan, Mississippi, North Carolina and Oregon—wherever a new industry has opened up. Washington, D. C., is hard pressed because of the influx of government workers and Navy Yard laborers.

Despite an appropriation of $150,000,000 for Community Defense Facilities, only four school projects have been approved. More will be undertaken in time, of course, but sewage and water supplies have to be looked after first out of the same fund. Whether there will be sufficient money left for schools after the other work is done is doubtful. The Office of Education, on the basis of a defense survey, asked congress for $113,000,000 for schools alone, but was told that the combination Communities Facilities Bill would have to do.

Double shifts of classes, shared textbooks, over-burdened teachers will be the order of the day in many communities until buildings and funds are made available.

The concrete poured to create the Dneprostroy Dam would make a pavement an inch thick and a yard wide from New York to Omaha; if the timber used were made into a single board one foot wide and an inch thick, it would reach nearly four-fifths of the way around the world at the Equator.

Mother Plays no Favorites

Film Star's Mother Is an Example to Follow

By MARGUERITE YOUNG

NEA Service Staff Correspondent
NEW YORK — Mrs. Agnes Brodel of Detroit and California is quite surprised at the idea that an extraordinary child is apt to become a family problem. Even though one daughter achieves fame ahead of older and just-as-ambitious sisters, Mrs. Brodel says, "They can remain exactly the same in the family—if you love them the same."

Mrs. Brodel should know. She is the mother of red-topped Joan Leslie of the movies. At 16, Joan has played in five films and short, and she is starred in the current "Sergeant York." Her performance in the last feature prompted forecasts that this young, lissome girl sets a style for coming movie heroines.

Expects Success for Her Other Daughters

And Joan has two beautiful sisters. They are Betty, 19, and Mary, 21. "They'll get ahead too," the mother said. "Just watch them!"

"Betty always wanted to go into pictures, too," Mrs. Brodel related, "but I believe she has about decided they aren't for her. She's all wrapped up in learning to fly."

It was Joan who put Betty up to flying, her mother hinted. At least Joan egged Betty on. It started about two months ago. Betty attends a private school a half mile from home in Burbank and she comes flying over, signaling with her lights, till they all run out into the back yard with white towels waving. And they shout, "There's our Betty!"

Mary still "would love to star," her mother said. "But she wants a home too—she's getting one now, in fact."

Mary was married, a few months ago, to a pianist-composer. In his mother-in-law's estimate, the musician has a brilliant future.

There's scientific backing for Mrs. Brodel's belief that unusual gifts, even fame, needn't disturb family relations. However, when you have a son or daughter with some quality that attracts notice everywhere in town, it's necessary to keep before all of them, at all times, the fact that they're equal in their mother's and father's affections.

Mrs. Brodel's conversation, reflecting her faith and her concern, doing in three directions simultaneously, is a good example to follow. Many child experts point out that what irritates and wounds and sometimes warps the less-talented sister or brother is not only getting less attention outside the home. Very often that is accompanied by favoritism in the family, which hurts more.

Child May Have Hidden Gifts

For your own guidance in such a situation, it's helpful to keep in mind the fact that quite possibly the unrecognized child has gifts. Recent studies again show that what makes a recognized genius or great-success is not only native qualities but also environment. And one of the strongest environmental factors is the relationship the children have among themselves and with their parents.

Mrs. Brodel, a quiet and unassuming "first fan" of Joan and Betty and Mary, makes no pretensions to being an authority. She has just brought her girls up naturally. Her husband was a bank clerk in Detroit. The girls started playing in vaudeville, after school, very early. But Joan started earliest of all, when she was just two. They went to Canada for an appearance, and demand engagements kept them touring for 18 months. Joan attended St. Mary's convent in Montreal, the only English-speaking school.

Why does Mrs. Brodel suppose the lightning struck Joan first?

"I guess," she responded with perfectly sound insight, "and big reason was that she was just about born to the stage, and that gave her a head start."

Girl Seeking That Big City Job Must Map Her Campaign With Care

By RUTH MILLETT

The girl who has decided to go to a city and look for a job ought to spend plenty of time beforehand making her plans, lining up her leads, and getting her recommendations in order.

If she just picks up on the spur of the moment and decides to set out for the city to look for a job, chances are she will come home a disappointed girl.

For, unless she has a plan for job-hunting worked out in advance, a girl is likely to be awed by the very size of a large city and by the impersonal attitude of the smart looking girls who sit behind reception desks and try to discourage timid visitors from getting in to see the person who hands out jobs.

A girl who hasn't thought out her plan of campaign is likely to find herself settled in an expensive hotel (thereby cutting down the number of days she can look for work.) Or she may be living in an inconvenient location, and so wasting precious time getting to the places where she wants to apply for work.

Besides, if she hasn't a plan of attack that allows for a good many leads amounting to nothing, she is sure to find herself discouraged and on the verge of giving up after a few disappointing interviews.

Chances Are She'll Land Job

So the smart thing for a girl to do is to get her job-hunt planned as carefully as a Hitler blitzkrieg. She will know before she ever leaves home where she will live and how much it will cost her. She'll have an inexpensive room reserved in advance, so that there will be none of the business of arriving at a hotel and finding only expensive rooms vacant.

She'll have a good idea of what

Pillain Gets in 'Out Our Way' House

HOLLYWOOD — "Out Our Way" fans who also happen to be movie serial addicts, or victims, will have a chance to see Artist Jim Williams' new ranch home on the screen—but under rather odd circumstances. In a chapter-thriller called "King of the Texas Rangers," the ranch will be represented as the hideout of the head villain.

Early one morning a location company from Republic Studio was scouting northwest of Hollywood for a place that looked like a handsome ranch house in Texas. This one, they agreed, was just the spot—a wide sweep of field in front with horses grazing; a large barn and corral at one side; a long, rambling white-walled and red-tile-roofed house strictly early California) topping a hill. Photographed from the south and framed against the low mountains, it would look isolated, too. They could avoid showing the home of the Williams' nearest neighbors, Bob Taylor and Barbara Stanwyck.

Calls Off Dogs

The location manager was all set for some tough bargaining when he went up and asked if they could rent the place for a few hours. "Rent—why, of course not!" said the Williamses. "Just help yourselves, boys; only wait till we get the dogs in."

Nobody explained about the story, but it turns out that the ranch, shown as the headquarters of a nefarious foreign agent (Neil Hamilton) who's bent on sabotaging Texas oilfields. The hero who foils him in the final episode is Slingin' Sammy Baugh, former Texas football star turned actor.

Incidentally, anyone who sees any of these flickers shouldn't be fooled by the interior shots of the salubrious house. Republic took detailed still pictures of the entrance to Cartoonist Williams' home and has exactly reproduced the porch and doorway at the studio. From there on the rooms and furnishings are entirely the conception of a set designer.

Time Change

Studios and owners have had some sorry experiences in renting private houses and estates for movie making. In the old wildcatting days, producers thought nothing of tearing up lawns, shooting out windows and hurling paint around.

I remember Paramount's headache with "Men With Wings." For some early scenes a modest home was rented. It was supposed to be an old house in Maryland, and several exterior shots were made around it. The owners got a gratifying check and the company moved on.

Later, when executives decided ad-meals cost, and she'll even have a map of the city so that she can figure out how to find her way around without waiting any more money than necessary on taxi fares.

She'll know to what firms she expects to go for personal interviews and will have made appointments for those interviews by mail, whenever it was possible.

She will see that she has the very best recommendations she is able to get—and she won't be content with the "to whom it may concern . . ." type, but will have had her letters of recommendation sent to individual employers.

She will have her own sales talk worked out in advance—so she won't find herself too confused to put her best foot forward when she does get face to face with an employer.

She will know exactly what she plans to wear if the weather happens to be warm, cool or rainy.

If her preparations have been that complete, chances are she'll land a job in the time she allows herself for looking.

ditional sequences were needed at the "Maryland" house, the company went out there again and scarcely recognized the place. The owners had spent every dime of their studio check re-painting and remodeling.

Workers grimly set about restoring everything to its original shabbiness. Faint was scraped off, shrubs and trees dug up and set aside. When house and grounds looked exactly as they had, additional scenes were filmed. Then shrubs, trees, paint and carpentry were put back in place, the manager wrote another check, and the owners were happy.

NEW YORK—Johnny Hopp remarks that in his part of the country, back home in Nebraska, a world series check passes for two years of good pay.

There, my hearties, you have the answer to the St. Louis Cardinals' smack dab in a nutshell.

A world series check also represents two years of what Sam Houston considers good pay for a number of Red Birds.

It's about time Jack Kearns got next to himself. He no longer can get away with the old system of building a heavyweight.

The trouble with a lot of old fight managers who have become passe is that they don't know what to do when they get a good fighter. When it is time to let a fighter fight they seem to believe they have to do something else. They simply have to be out-smarting somebody, even though by now they should know they are only outsmarting themselves.

If Bill Poland can fight, he doesn't need to have stiff sticks in front of him.

It doesn't do a young heavyweight any good to have his knocked out opponent suspended as was Eddie Blunt in Washington.

This is particularly true when Jack Kearns is his manager and Bill Duffy is in his corner.

It was Bill Duffy who arranged the Great American Sucker Tour for Prime Beef Carnera.

Brooklyn baseball writer expresses fear those who vote on it may hesitate to name Dixie Walker the most valuable man in the National League because he was discarded by the American two years ago.

Now what difference should that make in the balloting?

Let me see, didn't the National discard a manager named Joe McCarthy?

Don McNeill has the right attitude in sports. The champion's feelings weren't hurt when he was seeded third in the nationals.

"Frank Kovacs beat me three times this year, so I either had to be seeded first or third," explains the Kenyon College man.

Attempting to ballyhoo Tony Shueco, Lew Burston boasts of his charge having beaten five world champions—Jack Sharkey, Jim Braddock, Maxie Rosenbloom, Bob Olin and Lou Brod-lard.

Manager Burston had better skip that one before someone figures out how old that makes Tony Shueco.

Cleveland protests President Har-didge's riding forfeiting a Wash-ington game to Boston.

As some wag cracks, the Indians don't want to forfeit a chance to finish third, as usual.

was born on the Steamer Kate Adams at Arkansas City, Arkansas, where his mother and father were in the hotel business. Since that time Mr. Belser has had extensive experience in catering. He has served in the Fred Harvey System, and as chef on the Matson Steamship Passenger Lines between San Francisco and Honolulu.

Later he was chef at the Cafe de Parve in Los Angeles, California and at the Caliente Club and the Silver Slipper in New Orleans, Louisiana. Prior to his arrival here Mr. Belser was chief instructor at Camp Joe T. Robinson, Little Rock, Arkansas, in charge of kitchens and training of cooks in preparation of foods under the National Defense Program.

Mr. Belser brings with him a trained personnel fully capable of rendering the high type of service to be expected of such an establishment.

All chefs, cooks and waitresses are white while bus boys and dish-washers are colored. The entire personnel are clad in immaculate white uniforms at all times.

The cafeteria will specialize in sea foods of all types and Mr. Belser states he will be pleased at any time to prepare special dishes upon request.

In equipping the cafeteria only the newest and most modern equipment has been used. Over 1200 gold plates, 3000 glasses and 1700 sets of silverware were required to serve Proving Ground employees. A new Coleman Coffee-maker will be in operation at all hours. The kitchen is also equipped with the only electric potato peeler and french fry cutter in this section of the state.

Red Cavalry in Surprise Move

Drive Spearhead Across Ouachita Into Blues Defense

By JERRY T. BAULCH

WITH THE ARMY ON THE ARKANSAS-LOUISIANA BORDER—(AP)—Cavalrymen of the Kolink Red army in a surprise pre-dawn thrust drove a spearhead across the Ouachita river into Almat shore defense in Arkansas Wednesday.

In the assault boats carried the dismounted second cavalry across the wide stream that had been barring the Red offensive, swiftly laid pontoon bridges, and brought the horse's across.

While the 9th Engineers were putting the bridge together the horsemen on foot struck at the flank of the 7th Army Corps 35th Division to the north.

The crossing was augmented by two fake attempts further up the stream to draw the forces of Major-General Robert Richardson, Jr., into a horse-shoe bend where they would be trapped by the 14th Cavalry.

Meanwhile the infantry of both forces fought a pitched battle 20 miles north of Camden.

Meet Uncle Sam, New Fashion Designer

By NEA Service
WASHINGTON — Meet Uncle Sam fashion designer. He's seeing that women comrades-in-defense will look well as well as work well. They'll assume their thousand-and-one new tasks, in the factory and home and on the farm, in clothes enhancing both their freedom and their charms, even when these clothes are pants.

Just to make sure about this, government fashion experts themselves have designed a whole collection of washable cotton work suits. They're all rough-and-ready outfits with safety-insuring details. But they're pretty, too, because their lines are soft, and the colors can be as gay and cheering as you like.

The Bureau of Home Economics of the Department of Agriculture originated the designs. There's a jumper slack suit with roomy armholes. It can be worn with many bright blouses, and those can be fresh and feminine outdoors as well as in the field. Another country costume actually is called a field suit. This easily-domed ensemble has slide-fastener closings at the ankles which are cut snugly to prevent catching in the tractor and dragging dirt along the furrow. Anti-branch sleeves snap on or off, while a washable, roundly becoming bonnet goes with the field suit.

Women who prefer their skirts, thank you, will appreciate a new coverall apron which is worn with any soft blouse, such as a gingham shirt. This has pockets in the seams—where they won't tear. A good companion to the coverall is a seersucker coverette suit with ample legs and huge pockets.

Uncle Sam shows a real mechanic's suit for the defense industry girl. All the room in the world is provided for reaching, stooping and sitting, and the pockets have collapsible fullness. There's a washable visored cap to tip to the foreman.

From the looks of these government-sponsored clothes, it seems that defense officials, too, are aware of the morale-maintaining effect of being well dressed for every occasion—especially for work.

Barbs

Doing right probably would be a lot more popular if it were wrong.

If men are forced to wear cotton instead of silk hosiery they'll consider it an awful sock.

Chicago promoter wound up a half million in debt. When you try to catch fish you often lose your bait.

A doctor says too much kissing causes heart trouble. Go to the head of the class, doc.

The only fool bigger than a big fool is the man who argues with one.

Mind Your Manners

Test your knowledge of correct social usage by answering the following questions, then checking against the authoritative answers below.

1. Should a hostess talk about how much the price of food has gone up?

2. If a guest praises a brand of Scotch served him by his host, may he ask the cost of it?

3. If you are introduced to a doctor, should you begin immediately to talk about sickness?

4. If you say something that is funny, though unintentionally so, should you laugh with the others or get angry?

5. If guests are enjoying a general conversation, should the host turn on the radio because there happens to be a program he wants to hear?

What would you do if — You are writing a business letter in which you wish to apologize for a mistake—

(a) Phrase your apology "I regret . . ."

(b) Phrase your apology "I am sorry . . ."

Answers

1. No.

2. No.

3. No. When out socially most doctors want to get away from symptoms and diseases.

4. Laugh with the others.

5. No. When a person entertains others, he must think first of their pleasure.

Best "What Would You Do" solution—(b). The more simple the language, the better.

This is the new field suit designed by government experts for rough and ready farm work. The model is Gertrude Lowell, of the Bureau of Home Economics.

Defense Boosting New-Uses-for-Cotton

WASHINGTON — This business of having to find substitutes because of the defense effort turns up in the damndest places. In addition to Army, Navy and British demands for increased food supplies, plus all the wrangling over increased parity payments and the 40-cent penalty on surplus wheat, preparedness and priorities reach right down to the farm, and in ways that you'd never think.

Take the ordinary, everyday gunnysack, for instance—burlap if you want to give it the proper name. Practically all the burlap used in the United States is imported from India, and 80 per cent of the year's normal supply of 725 million yards is used for bagging farm products—potatoes, fertilizer, cotton bales and so on. But shipping space from India is scarce. The supply is unequal to the demand, and prices would have been way up by now if OPACS—Office of Price Administration and Civilian Supply to you—hadn't slapped down a maximum to keep the matter under control.

While that keeps the price in line, it still doesn't supply any more burlap and if the country should ever have to do a lot of real defense building, such as sandbagging the Statue of Liberty, Boulder Dam, or any other national monument, things would really get tough.

The only answer to the problem is to start making burlap out of something else. Right here is where all that surplus cotton comes in. Also, it's right where the Department of Agriculture's big program of finding new uses for farm surpluses comes in, and all its research is just starting to pay dividends in a constructive way.

In the Bag for Cotton
Burlap formerly made of burlap, because it was cheaper, will have to be made out of cotton even though the price of cotton is being permitted to rise while the price of burlap is pegged.

In connection with cotton burlap coverings, a curious sidelight: Cotton bales have always been wrapped in burlap because the burlap wrapping for a bale of cotton is 7½ pounds heavier than a cotton pattern wrapping would be, and cotton is bought and sold on a gross weight basis. Cotton growers, thinking they have been beating the buyers, have always figured they were selling that 7½ lbs. of cheap burlap at cotton prices. For that simple reason and no other it has been impossible to persuade the tradition-bound cotton grower to change his ways to the extent of using a cotton wrapped bale.

Naturally, the cotton buyers have known that this 7½ pounds of extra burlap weight was there and have rigged their prices accordingly, but it has been impossible to sell that idea in the south, even though the use of cotton pattern wrappers for a crop of 12 million bales would have helped consume another 130,000 bales of surplus cotton.

Use of bale wrappers is only one of the new uses for cotton which have been worked out by the Department of Agriculture, largely through its Southern Regional Research Laboratory at New Orleans. And in many of these new uses, defense scarcities may force into use substitutes which logically should have been adopted.

Spencer Asserts Increase to Be $3 Per Thousand

WASHINGTON —(P)— Senator Lloyd Spencer (D. Ark.) of Hope, reported Wednesday after a conference with officials of the Office of Price Administration and Civilian Supply that ceiling prices on southern pine lumber would be raised generally on an average of $3 per thousand feet.

Spencer said the government probably would make a formal announcement during the day of the decision which he said was in line with figures discussed between southern pine manufacturers and A. P. C. A. officials in New Orleans August 31.

CS ANGELES —(P)— Those movie style sombreros in Mexico—in case you ever see any—are on American tourists, says Harry C. Ostrander, returned traveler. An Autobiography of Egypt

By PAUL GOOD
11-year-old Boy Wrote This

My name is Egypt. I was born thousands and thousands of years ago. My home was a tiny, secluded corner on the vast estate called Africa. I was raised on sand, the Sahara, and water, the Nile. My mother was a valley between the Tigris and the Euphrates Rivers. Somehow she did not care for this abode and she moved westward, and there I, mighty Egypt, was born.

My servants, the Egyptians, were very highly educated, in fact they were one of the first civilizations. I am told. They built great temples and palaces, they irrigated lands, original hieroglyphics, hieratics and demotics, in fact they changed my very plain face and illiterate manners into one of the most handsome and brightest children in the world. And then they did a strange thing. They appointed a man named the Pharaoh to watch over my affairs and govern me. These Pharaohs were so great, that when they died, they built great mounds of stone called pyramids and they placed his body there. This I found out later was a great honor. I admit I was rather young and quarrelsome and usually I came out worst in battles.

As I said before, that when I fought I usually came out defeated. But my I had spirit. Through all my trials and defeats I emerged, never daunted, never discouraged, and always going on to greater triumphs and achievements.

I'm older now, and I'm not as spry as before, but I'm still forging toward bigger and better victories and successes. Some day, in fact even now, the world will realize that I, the child of long ago, was and always will be one of the greatest civilizations man has ever known.

August is boom time for Peggy Klaus, 16-year-old Kelso, Wash., high school girl. With entailed boots and rolled pant legs, she joins lumberjacks in keeping Cowitz river log boom moving.

Oh, for the Life of a Soldier!

One of the war games must be postoffice, judging from this enthusiastic farewell given by soldiers to girls at Manhattan Army party sponsored by Anne Morgan, socialite and war worker. All show well-planned strategy, except sergeant at upper right, who seems more interested in camera than kisses.

Sign of the Time

Familiar figure of Churchill and cigar makes novel signboard for air raid warden's post in London. The "10" is the post's number, and also Churchill's Downing Street address.

Light for Vichy

Gaston Henry-Haye, French ambassador to U. S., pauses for a light after enlightening reporters that "collaboration" with Nazis didn't mean Vichy would turn over bases or French fleet.

Nazis Advance on Two Major Fronts

Two major fronts are spotlighted in the war news from Russia as German troops near capture of Leningrad in the north, and Odessa and all the Ukraine west of the Dnieper in the south. Map shows advances in these two sectors, and complete Russo-German front.

Eden Speedin'

Broad-stepping British Foreign Minister Anthony Eden hurries hatless into No. 10 Downing street, London, for quick conference, probably on rushing aid to Russia. Note inevitable British umbrella.

In Doghouse?

Fritz von Papen, above, after Hess and Goering, is latest Nazi reported to have fallen in ill favor with Hitler because of his failure to achieve a German-Turkish military alliance while in Ankara as ambassador.

Ancients in Path of Modern War

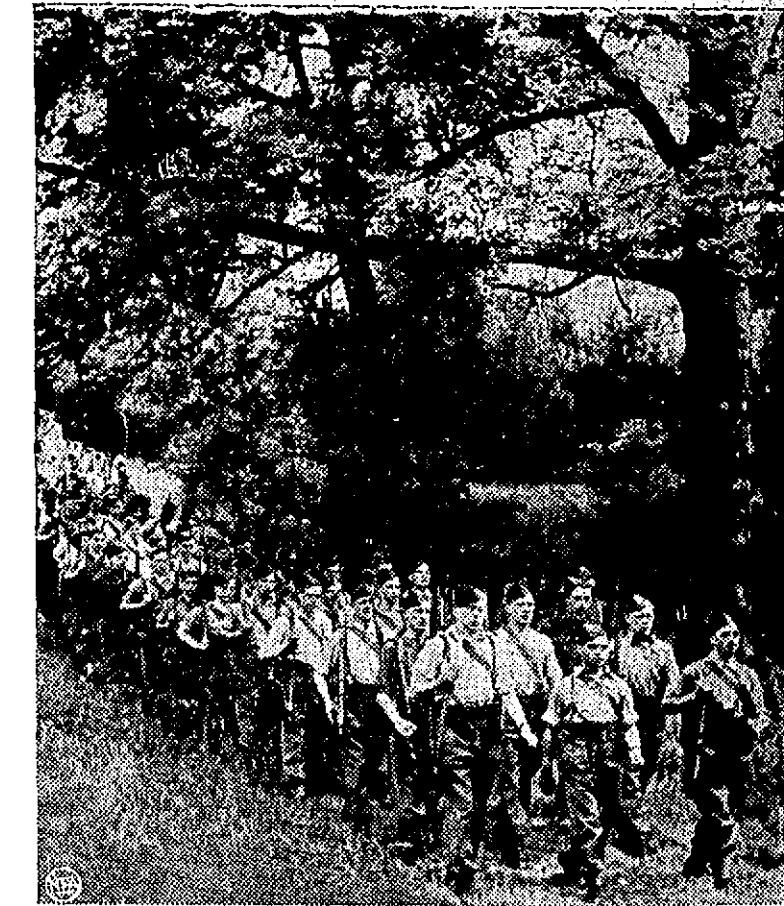

These mountain men of Iran may be first to see invading armies. Typical of that group of natives still clinging to ancient dress and custom, they live in the north, near the Russian frontier.

Singing Sandburg

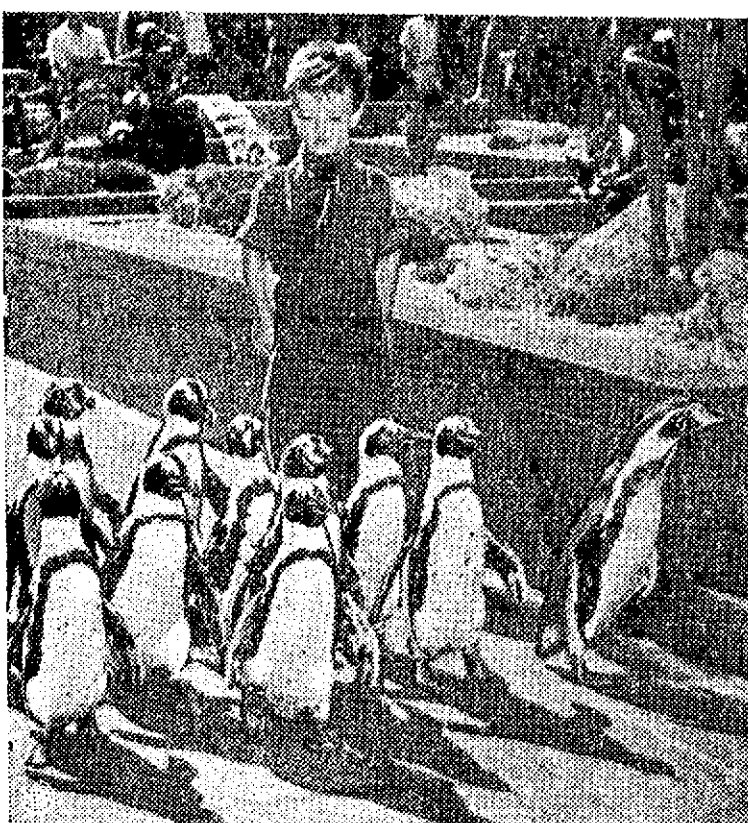

You wouldn't expect to find Carl Sandburg, snowy-topped poet and Lincoln biographer, strumming a guitar and crooning cowboy songs in Madison Square Garden, but here he is, at Council for Democracy rally in New York.

Shades of Sherwood Forest

Like a band of Robin Hood's daring men, a group of British Home Guards swing jauntily through the woods somewhere in England. They're making one of their daily "keep-fit" marches.

Penguins Pound N. Y. Pavements

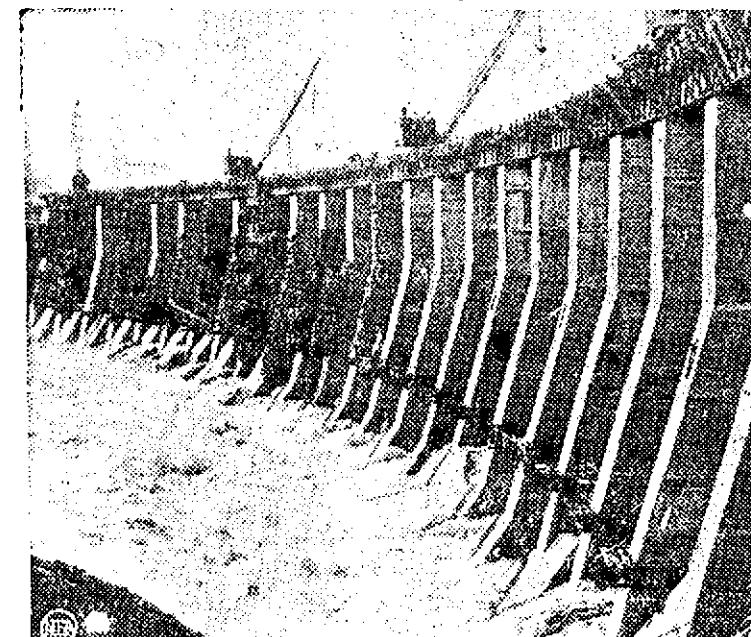

Gotham gawkers got a gander at this penguin parade when Byrd birds from the Bronx Zoo promenaded in Rockefeller Center under shepherding of 6-year-old film star Michael J. O'Donnell. The penguin party is headed for the Prometheus fountain pool, all except Uncle Winston, right. He's looking for a bar.

Canine Fodder

Even Rover is rationed in hungry Europe. This sad-eyed pooch of Lyons, France, holds his ration card in his teeth as he waits in line for dog food.

Dnieper Dam Dynamited?

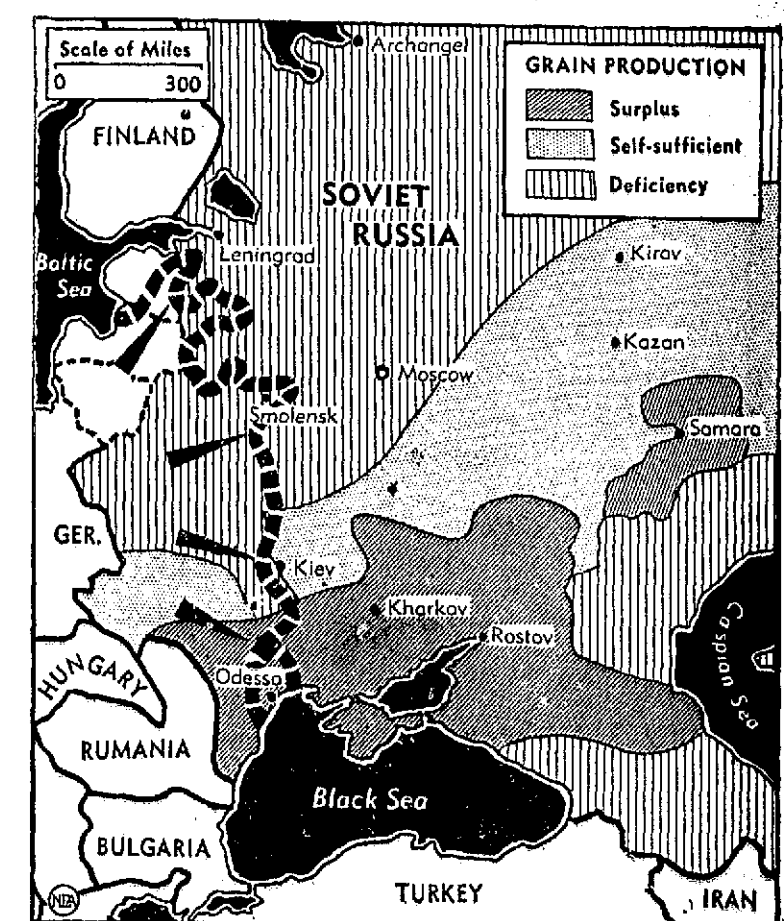

To send a wall of water down the Dnieper river valley and delay advancing Germans, Russians are reported to have blown up this great power dam, pride of Soviet industry, on Stalin's orders.

Porthole Peeker

Peering through a porthole, 3-year-old Serge Mandelbaum gets his first look at the land of freedom as he arrives in New York on Spanish steamer City of Seville.

Red Bread Endangered

Swift German advances are enveloping the vast grainlands of Soviet Russia, whence comes the bread to feed her millions. Some grain has been harvested, but much is being burned in front of the Nazi advance. Map shows extent of grain areas in Russia.

Disagree on Gifted Child

Experts Aren't Sure What Gifted Child Is

By ADELAIDE KERR
AP Feature Service Writer
NEW YORK — What is a gifted child? Even educational experts have not agreed on that point yet.

One definition is "A child who has exceptional ability in handling ideas, producing things creatively and demonstrating social leadership."

Most educational big-wigs agree, however, that he must have a high IQ. Opinion culled from some outstanding experts is that he generally also has these qualities: Integrity, Independence, Originality, Creative Imagination, Vitality, Cooperation, Fearlessness, Warmth, Poise, Stability, Audacity, Love of beauty, Capacity for non-conformity. And cold courage. All these things they point out, are "traits to cherish in leaders."

Contrary to general belief, the smart child is not puny, but is likely to be healthy and tall. He is as good as others at sports, but because of a catholicity of interests, he doesn't rate higher than the average when it comes to play. He reads a wide variety of books and magazines, loves to dig into encyclopedias and ask questions from morning till night. (Pity the poor parents!)

Professor Leta Stetter Hollingworth of Columbia Teachers College, one of the foremost pioneers in the education of the gifted child, tells of the mother of a bright eight-year-old girl. Preparing to give a family dinner she bought some new goblets. When the table was set she called in the child and said:

"Look, Jennie, we have new goblets. The flowers on them are etched into glass. I don't know how etching is done, so don't ask. Don't ask where goblets came from in the first place, or who named them goblets, for I don't know. These came from Wanamaker's. They cost fifty cents each. I bought exactly a dozen. They hold about half a pint each. The reason I did not buy colored ones is that they do not go with all of our dishes."

The SNAPSHOT GUILD

PICTURE COMPOSITION

Good arrangement makes this picture striking. A few simple rules, wisely applied, will help you improve your own snapshots.

MANY volumes have been written on composition—some of them excellent treatises on the subject—and there have been an untold number of discussions of what makes a picture pictorial. Unfortunately much of this material is so complicated and involved that it frightens the average amateur.

Generally speaking, the "composition" of a picture is simply a pleasing arrangement—an arrangement that "feels" right and satisfies the eye. In taking pictures, a little thought and common sense are better than a whole encyclopedia of rules.

Every picture subject is different, and no rule or set of rules can cover everything. When you choose a picture subject, simply ask yourself—"What arrangement of this will be most pleasing in the print?" Visualize the possibilities, then arrange the parts of your picture so that they carry out that idea. After that, simply frame your subject properly in the viewfinder, and release the shutter.

In pictorial composition, there are a few basic points that, if remembered, will aid anyone in making more attractive pictures.

Have but one main or dominating center of interest. See that each picture tells only one story. The principal subject may be flowers, one person or several, a nearby pond, or a distant mountain; but whatever it is, give that subject proper prominence.

Then there should be objects of secondary importance, unless it is a closeup portrait. If the picture is a group of trees, a second group, a little farther away, will help toward balance. When people are in a picture and the principal thing you wish to photograph is a distant mountain, have them look—not at the camera, but toward the mountain.

Backgrounds too are important in composition. Be sure that no tree branches are apparently growing out of a person's head, or an uncovered trolley or claphouse is used for a background.

Organize the component parts of your pictures just as you would a room in your house. Spend a few extra minutes in planning, and work out the details before you shoot. It's not difficult—just arrange your snapshots in the viewfinder to please the eye, and you'll get better pictures.

CHAPTER IX

THOUGHT AWAKENING for brighter intellects. Gain new power from an entirely unknown source. Take advantage of your opportunity today. Address Hol-

TED ANDREWS clipped the advertisement from the paper, carefully tucked it into his billfold. He had waited patiently for this, ever since he mailed a letter to Washington a week ago.

It was apparently an innocent message concerning some new thought process, but to Ted it said that FBI agents were investigating certain individuals and that an agent would contact him today. Meanwhile, he was ordered to keep a close check on all parties connected with Wondrosop.

Kay could have no interest in selling her product to a foreign power—unless the price offered was astonishingly high. She could only stand to lose everything if the plot was uncovered.

That left Mary Marshall, Hans Stadl, and Joe Benton.

Mary apparently knew nothing of chemistry. She had come to work for Kay long before there was any idea that Wondrosop was anything more than a cleaner.

Was Hans Stadl as loyal to America as he professed? Ted recalled stories of other loyal American citizens who had been forced to co-operate with Nazi agents to protect relatives in Germany. Was Hans a victim of such pressure?

And Joe Benton. Kay had taken him at face value. But Ted had not. But Benton's story rang true. He was a professor of chemistry at the university. But even that might be a blind.

At any rate, they would know today, when the federal agents arrived.

Ted hurried into the office. KAY, Mary, and Joe Benton were there. Joe was excitedly explaining his latest success.

"We followed the formula we found in your father's papers, Kay. It was astonishingly simple. I didn't even let Hans see how it was mixed. That secret belongs to you and to Uncle Sam. Then we made a sample run of Wondrosop. The stuff reacts exactly as that your father manufactured. You can't tell the difference. We've made it!"

"Thanks to you, Joe," Kay's eyes were tear-bright. "Now the government can take over the plant, start operations at once."

"You're worth a lot of money now, Kay," Mary said. "This formula would be priceless to any government."

Ted caught his breath at the girl's words. "But there's only one government that's going to get it!" he said grimly.

Joe Benton broke the tension. "We've made all the tests on Wondrosop except one. Old Hans says a bullet won't explode it, but we've never tried it. How about a test and a little target practice? I picked up this target pistol today, just to try it out."

"Swell idea," Kay agreed. "We want a full report for the Army officers."

Was this the payoff? Ted wondered.

Kay and Joe led the way out of the office. Mary paused to pick up her satchel. Ted didn't miss it, either. Why should she need a jacket on a warm summer day? Maybe Mary and Joe.

The formula was locked in the newly purchased safe, and only Kay knew the combination. He would stay close to Kay.

JOE stopped in the laboratory to get the pistol and a half-empty can of Wondrosop.

"We'll shoot at Ted's kindling pile," Benton directed. "Then if there is an explosion, there'll be little damage. There's not much Wondrosop in this can, so the danger is minimized."

Ted stood at Kay's elbow while Benton arranged the target. "Who wants the first shot? Kay, you take a try at it. You better stand well away. That kindling wood will spread around if it does go off."

Kay took the gun from him and, standing well back, took careful aim. Her bullet plowed into the pile of wood, missed the target entirely. Joe reloaded, handed the gun to Mary Marshall.

Mary paused for a minute, then swung the pistol up to eye level. There was a sharp "Crack!" The Wondrosop can disappeared. Joe ran to the kindling pile, searched for a minute, then raised the can high.

"That's real shooting, Mary!" he shouted. "You hit the middle 'O' due center."

Ted saw her drop the target pistol, but he did not see her draw the other gun from her jacket pocket. It was an ugly, snub-nosed automatic.

"All right, Joe Benton. Come in—with your hands up!" All the softness was gone from the girl's voice. Quiet, unassuming Mary, covering Benton with a gun! Ted gasped.

"Mary!" Kay screamed. Ted caught her arm.

"Let her alone!" he ordered.

"What's this all about?" Benton demanded. "Put down that gun, Mary! Who do you think I am?"

"I know who you are and what you're doing," Her voice was calm, steady. "But your plot won't work. This formula belongs to the U. S. Army, and the U. S. Army is going to get it!"

A car raced toward the plant. Dust hid the occupants as it slid to a stop. Men jumped from the doors—men with drawn guns.

MIKE FLYNN ran toward them. "Don't shoot!" he yelled. There were other men behind him.

Mike was trembling when he reached Kay. "You're all right, Katie?"

She wanted to cry, but she forced back the tears. "Sure, I'm all right. We're all safe. What is this? Who are these men?"

"They're FBI, Katie. Ted was worried about someone stealing your formula, notified the government agents."

"But Joe? Mary?"

They were snapping handcuffs on Joe Benton then, bringing him back to the group near the office door.

"Mary is a special policeman, detailed to protect you," Flynn explained. "I hired her when you came to live in the plant, sent her to Ted to apply for a job as your secretary. She's been watching this Benton, especially after you discovered Wondrosop is an explosive. She reported to me, Benton is the only one who knows the formula, but he's not going to get it out of this country."

For a captured spy, Joe Benton was anything but downcast. He was actually smiling.

"I'd like to talk to Miss Kay, Flynn and the others," he told his captors. They led him closer.

"You're right, Mary, the jig is up. But not exactly as you think it is. I don't blame you for being suspicious. Mr. Flynn, will reach inside my shirt—you'll find a money belt, strapped around my waist. Unbuckle it."

Flynn complied, drew out a long belt.

"Now call your federal men," Benton directed. They came closer. "Who is in charge?"

"I'm Taylor."

"Taylor, take that belt, look in the first pocket. You'll see a place where the stitching is broken. Inside that belt you'll find a paper. Will you read it?" Benton's smile never faded.

Taylor opened the belt, drew out a paper, read it quickly and returned it to its place. "Take off those cuffs," he ordered.

Back-to-Schoolers Make Last Minute Buying Tour

It's our last gasp on back-to-school-

ers. Now they're ringing the cash registers with colored cotton panties!

Having weighed the item of the winter coat, laid in a supply of colorful campus togs and goofy accessories, you might think they'd relax on the undie topic. But no. They know what they want, they get it, and they're willing to pay.

Beneath their visible clothing, the co-eds want smooth-fitting underwear, and it must be either neutral or keyed to their campus clothes in color and theme. Durability and the laundry problem figure heavily in the fabric selection.

Speyer School Experiment
The woman was Leta Hollingworth. She conducted the latest and best known experiment on the education of both gifted and slow-learning children at Speyer School in New York. Its five-year test (in which the New York Board of Education and Columbia Teachers College linked hands) ended early in 1941, more than a year after her death.

Today 12 public schools of Greater New York have classes for intellectually gifted children. Outstanding among them is Brooklyn's Public School 208, where 300 bright boys and girls in 10 classes take some educational hurdles in advance of their years.

First they study the Three R's, spelling and English composition like any other children. Besides this the first four grades study social science, history, geography and literature in connection with a "unit of work" based on some such theme as "Life on a farm" selected by pupils and teacher. To these subjects the last four grades add biology, history, physics and chemistry, studied in connection with a more advanced unit of work.

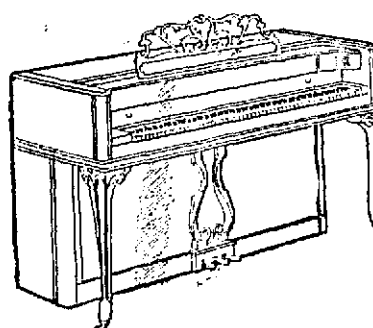

Then comes enrichment. Several days a week they hammer away at typewriters and tangle their tongues on French. Again they're immersed in the arts—music, painting, sculpture and crafts. And finally they take a turn at interpretative and acrobatic dancing. The eldest also get to click their heels in the fox-trot, rumba, conga and tango.
